

OFFICIAL POSITION STATEMENT STRUCTURAL AUDIT IS NOT CLIMATE-FINANCE SKEPTICISM

ENHANCE Institute supports effective, accessible, and accountable climate finance.

We do not advocate for the weakening, delegitimization, or dissolution of institutions created to mobilize and deliver climate finance to countries and communities facing climate vulnerability. The need for climate finance is substantial, and institutions capable of mobilizing, allocating, and monitoring climate capital at scale remain essential.

Structural audit asks whether that finance is capable of achieving its own stated purpose.

An audit is not punishment. It is a disciplined examination of evidence, design, implementation conditions, and results. It should recognize documented merit, identify material gaps, distinguish confidence from evidence, and clarify what would be required to improve the structure under review.

Climate-finance volume matters. Structural integrity also matters.

Financial instruments should match country conditions and beneficiary needs. Climate claims should have defensible causal mechanisms, boundaries, baselines, and measurement systems. Reported results should correspond to what a project can reasonably be shown to have changed. Vulnerable beneficiaries should not appear only as narrative endpoints when the documented distribution of value, risk, or access points elsewhere.

ENHANCE's role is to examine these relationships using disclosed evidence and defined analytical methods.

ENHANCE rejects the selective use of its findings to imply that all climate finance is ineffective, illegitimate, or unnecessary. A structural finding applies within the scope, evidence, and limitations stated in the relevant report. It should not be generalized beyond that scope without additional analysis.

ENHANCE also rejects the proposition that support for climate finance requires uncritical acceptance of every climate-labelled project, instrument, or reported outcome. Accountability and institutional support are not opposites. Credible scrutiny can strengthen decision making, protect beneficiaries, improve capital allocation, and support public confidence.

ENHANCE is independent of the institutions it assesses. Independence does not mean hostility, political neutrality by assertion, or immunity from criticism. It means that findings are governed by evidence and method rather than by the preferences of an assessed party, sponsor, client, political group, or advocacy interest.

Those who agree with an ENHANCE report do not acquire ownership of it.

Those who disagree are invited to challenge its evidence, assumptions, calculations, and reasoning. Material corrections will be documented.

We support climate finance.

We examine its structures because its mandate is too important to be protected by narrative alone.
